

Commonwealth Fund Fellowship in Minority Health Leadership at Yale University

The Commonwealth Fund Fellowship in Minority Health Leadership at Yale University is a 22-month, fully funded degree-granting program that gives healthcare practitioners the leadership skills and the deep understanding of teams, markets, and organizations necessary to tackle major inequities in the U.S. healthcare system.

Fellows attend the MBA for Executives program with a focus on healthcare while also receiving specialized training and mentoring from experts in healthcare disparities from across the university and beyond.

Fellows

The fellowship is open to health practitioners, including nurses, physicians, and physician assistants, who are committed to improving healthcare access and outcomes for minorities, socio-economically disadvantaged groups, and other vulnerable populations.

Program Structure

Fellows earn an MBA over 22 months, with classes every other weekend and four in-residence weeks, allowing them to continue in their current roles while building business acumen and gaining valuable leadership capabilities. In addition, Yale-Commonwealth Fund fellows benefit from mentoring, immersion trips, and hands-on project opportunities centered on minority health.

Apply

To apply to the fellowship, complete the online application for the MBA for Executives program and select the healthcare area of focus. When prompted, confirm you are applying to the Yale-Commonwealth Fund Fellowship and complete the corresponding essay.

“This is a unique training opportunity for emerging and established leaders in minority health who are ready to broaden their impact and transform the health equity landscape.”

Dr. Marcella Nunez-Smith

Director of the Commonwealth Fund Fellowship in Minority Health Leadership at Yale University

som.yale.edu/commonwealth

